Responding to your application

When you apply for one of our lending products, we understand you want a fast decision, based on a fair view of your circumstances.

We use a method called credit scoring to help us respond to you quickly in a way that's impartial. We have been using credit scoring for many years to guide us on all of our customers' applications. For example, we use it if you're applying for lending. We believe it provides a straightforward solution, and hope you do too. After all, we take our responsibilities as a bank very seriously.

There is more information about credit scoring on our website:

Working out your credit score

We typically use three sources of information to build your credit profile:

- Your application
Details submitted by you.
- Credit reference agencies
Information about your personal financial history supplied by credit reference agencies.
- Account management
How you've managed any loans, credit cards or any other accounts you have with Lloyds Banking Group.

Credit scoring is based on the experience that we have built up with thousands of borrowers over time. Our credit scoring methods are regularly reviewed to make sure that they meet our regulatory commitments.

We cannot be specific about how we calculate your score; however, your credit score is personal to you and can alter as your circumstances change. So, even if your application is turned down this time, we may be able to give you a positive decision the next time.

How we work with credit reference agencies

A credit reference agency is a company that gathers and stores financial and public information about almost every adult in the UK. It does not create or maintain blacklists, and does not make a decision on an application.

In common with other banks, we share information about how well you have repaid any lending with the credit reference agencies. Information is collected from several sources.

Where credit reference agencies get their information

From public records

The electoral register helps confirm your identity and address.

Court records, such as County Court Judgements (CCJs), insolvencies or bankruptcies, that may show previous financial problems that should be taken into account.

From other companies

This could include details of previous applications you have made to borrow, your current levels of debt and whether you have always made repayments on time.

Knowing this can show whether you have outstanding credit and how well you are managing your finances.

Checking your personal record

We use three major credit reference agencies:

As a bank all our information is sent to all three agencies. You can get details of the information they hold about you by visiting the websites above or by sending each of them a written request.

When the company replies, they will provide information about your credit file. If you see that they are holding particular information about you that is wrong, you should let them know straightaway. The credit reference agency can advise you on the best way to get it changed, by raising a dispute.

If we cannot accept your application

We will always let you know if we cannot accept your application. Our decision is based on the information that we have about you at that time, including:

- Your credit score.
- Our policy on lending.
- Information held by a credit reference agency.

We always aim to give you a decision on your credit scoring application on the same day. However, sometimes the process can take longer.

How you can appeal our decision

If we turn down your application, you can appeal by writing to the relevant department below.

We're unlikely to change our decision without new information. However, if you provide evidence that our details are incorrect or incomplete, we may reconsider your application.
